Why it is important to R.S.V.P.

It is important that if you plan on attending the meeting that you R.S.V.P. by the deadline above. The reason that we ask you to do this is two-fold: (1) we know how many members to expect and (2) in the event we have to cancel the meeting for any reason we know who to call. ## Recipe of the Month

Baian Fish Stew

By Nancy Patton Mills

- 6 grinds fresh black pepper
- 1/2 tsp cumin
- 1 Tbs chopped coriander
- 1/2 dried kombu (seaweed)
- 1 small sprig fresh rue
- 1 1/4 cups medium white wine
- 2 lbs mussels in the shell, washed
- 3 3/4 cups water
- 3-4 fresh scallops, chopped
- 1 oz pine nuts, lightly browned

Baiae was a popular seaside resort near Naples, which is presumably where Apicius tasted this delicious fish soup/stew. The original suggests "sea nettles" which is interpreted as a seaweed. To make: Heat oil and gently cook celery, pepper, cumin, and coriander. Add seaweed, rue, and white wine; bring to a boil and simmer for several minutes. Bring up to a fast boil, add the fresh mussels, put on a lid and cook for 3-5 minutes over a high heat until the shells have all opened. Add the water, bring back to a boil and simmer for 10 minutes. Remove the sprig of rue; then remove mussels from their shells and return them to the soup pot. Add the chopped scallops and the pine nuts and continue to cook for several minutes until scallops are done. Season to taste.

This recipe is from Apicius, an author who wrote what is thought to be the first recipe book. It is from the third century AD, but is based on earlier origins. The recipes include foods that were plentiful at that time, such as vegetables, Mediterranean seafood, poultry, game, and pork. There was very little beef and lamb in that region. Wine was used extensively both in cooking and to accompany the meals; oil was the main cooking fat; honey the main sweetener; pepper, fresh coriander, thyme, rue, savory, fennel, and oregano were used constantly, as was vinegar.

My son Richard J. Mills, Jr. and I wrote our dissertations at the same time--mine was about the American family in the 1950s and his was on Community and the Meal. The content of his dissertation included recipes from the Classical Period, The Renaissance and Enlightenment, and Modernity and Postmodernity. We enjoyed these recipes from ancient Rome more than any others. Richard and I wrote our dissertations together, defended them on the same day, and received our Ph.D's the same day (2006). These recipes bring back very fond memories for both of us.

TIDBITS . . . Did You Know

Jeannette Business District (Clay Avenue)

With a current population of around 10,000, Jeannette lies near the center of Westmoreland County between Routes 30 and 22. It is approximately 25 miles east of Pittsburgh and four miles east of the Irwin interchange on the Pennsylvania Turnpike.

Jeannette began in the spring of 1888, when several local farms were purchased for the development of the Chambers and McKee Glass Works. Long rows of brick houses were built in order to provide homes for glass plant workers. Jeannette, named after the wife of H. Sellers McKee, was ideally positioned for the early glass industry. Its resources in coal and natural gas, location along early railroads, and proximity to Pittsburgh all provided the impetus for quick growth. The first glass blown was on May 20, 1889. In time there would be seven great glass factories and a rubber plant, including the largest tableware glass factory in the world. Soon Jeannette took on another nickname The American Workshop. Jeannette was incorporated into a borough on June 7, 1889. Then on January 1, 1938 Jeannette became a third class city with Attorney John M. O'Connell as the first mayor.

One key historical factory was the American-Saint Gobains Industries, Inc. plant, which helped establish the commerce that would support the growing city of Jeannette. Originally founded as the Chambers and McKee Glass Works, the first owners of the plant, J. A. Chambers and H. Sellers McKee named Jeannettes Main Street after their financial backer, Richard W. Clay.

The factory was designed to be a hand-cylinder operation. A glob of molten glass was collected in the end of a metal tube and skilled blowers worked it into a large globe. The semi-molten globe was held downward and swung slowly while the blowing continued. The resulting cylinder was split in half and flattened to make windowpanes.

In 1889, the American Window Glass Company was incorporated in Pennsylvania and consolidated a number of smaller manufacturers, including the Chambers and McKee facilities. In 1903, American Window became the first company to produce sheet glass using a device known as the Lubbers cylinder machine. This process and the machine were named after its inventor, John H. Lubbers. In time, developments were made to minimize distortion of waviness and to eliminate the greenish cast of glass, which affected its transparency and light transmission. The entire glass industry adopted these methods. In 1958 American Window Glass was merged with Blue Ridge Glass to form American Saint Gobain Corporation, the only United States producer of all three types of flat glass, plate, sheet, and patterned-rolled. In 1970 the company was renamed ASG Industries, Inc.

Pittsburgh Branch Welcomes A New Member

Patricia (Patty) MacDonal Hansz

Patty was born and raised in Michigan. After she was married, the family moved to Texas when her children were small. She moved to Pittsburgh about 20 years ago. Her three children are grown now and none of them live in the Pittsburgh area. She has worked mostly in finance at companies like Morgan Stanley. Since she has no family obligations in Pittsburgh she has a lot of free time on her hands. She is a member of the League of Women Voters and joined AAUW in January of this year.

We are very happy to have Patty as a branch member and look forward to working with her. So let's all give Patty a warm welcome.

Women in Congress

Kelly A. Ayotte

Kelly A. Ayotte (born June 27, 1968) is the junior United States Senator from New Hampshire and a member of the Republican Party. She earlier served as the Attorney General of New Hampshire.

2010 Election

Incumbent Republican U.S. Senator Judd Gregg decided to retire, instead of seeking re-election in the 2010 senate election in New Hampshire. Ayotte resigned as Attorney General on July 7, 2009 to explore a run for U.S. Senate in 2010. Ayotte was recruited by the National Republican Party (National Republican Senatorial Committee) in Washington to enter the race. On September 14, 2010, Ayotte defeated lawyer Ovide Lamontagne, businessman Bill Binnie and Jim Bender in the Republican Senate primary. In the general election, Ayotte ran against Democratic nominee U.S. Representative Paul Hodes, Libertarian nominee Ken Blevens, and Independent Chris Booth.

Endorsements

Many prominent GOP figures went to New Hampshire to help Ayotte in her 2010 campaign, including John McCain, Sarah Palin, Mitt Romney, Haley Barbour, and Rick Santorum. According to one senior GOP aide, "The addition of a Republican woman from New England who's young, who's a mom ... all of these things broaden the Republican party's appeal and say to different segments of the population, 'This party has folks in it that are just like you.'"

Political Positions

Abortion: Ayotte is pro-life and believes that abortion should be prohibited except in cases of rape, incest or health of the mother. Where abortion is legal, Ayotte supports parental notification before abortions may be performed on unemancipated minors and opposes any federal funding for elective abortions in accordance with the Hyde Amendment. Ayotte has expressed her determination to be a strong vocal advocate for unborn children in the U.S. Senate.

Labor rights and minimum wage: Ayotte opposes passage of Employee Free Choice Act ("Card Check"), a bill currently under consideration by Congress that proposes to amend the National Labor Relations Act to reform the process by which employees decide whether to form or join a labor union.

Ayotte opposes passage of legislation that mandates that employers provide paid sick leave to their employees.
